

CJ looked around as he stepped off the bus.
Crumbling sidewalks and broken-down doors,
graffiti-tagged windows and boarded-up stores.
He reached for his Nana's hand.
"How come it's always so dirty over here?"

She smiled and pointed to the sky.
"Sometimes when you're surrounded by dirt, CJ, you're a better witness for what's beautiful."